Six tips for your dog with separation anxiety

Understand the difference between anxiety & excitement

When dogs act inappropriately, the behavior may seem like excitement to us, but it's often anxiety manifesting.

Reinforce behaviors and states of mind

you want from your dog

It's vital to reinforce good behavior while making sure you don't support the behaviors you don't want your dog to repeat.

Provide outlets to avoid boredom

If your dog is occupied with a toy, it keeps their brain engaged and focused on the toy instead of thinking about where you are.

Story of the month Elton

If you want to stop your dog from charging the front door when someone knocks or jumping up when they're excited, it starts with teaching them impulse control.

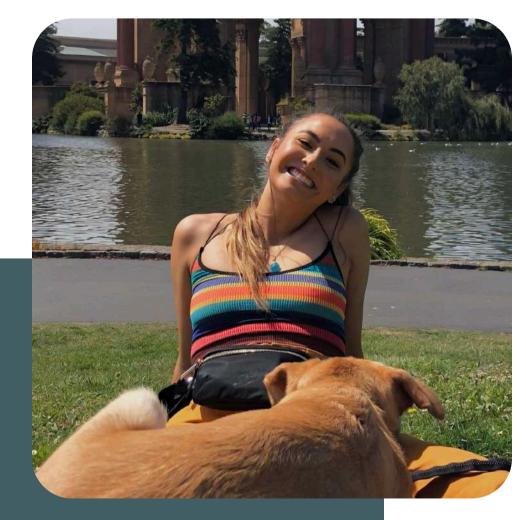

Elton's owner signed him up for our Board & Train program with hopes of changing his "overly-friendly" habits. Elton became easily excited when he saw people or other dogs. By working on "Place" command and loose-leash walking in distracting environments with his trainer Irini, Elton is learning to stay calm in those situations and making big strides!

Trainer highlight

Jordan Chock

"Ever since I was little, my nickname has been "Boo", but I've always had such a connection to animals that my parents started calling me "Dr. Boo Little." Since then, I've dreamed of working with animals.

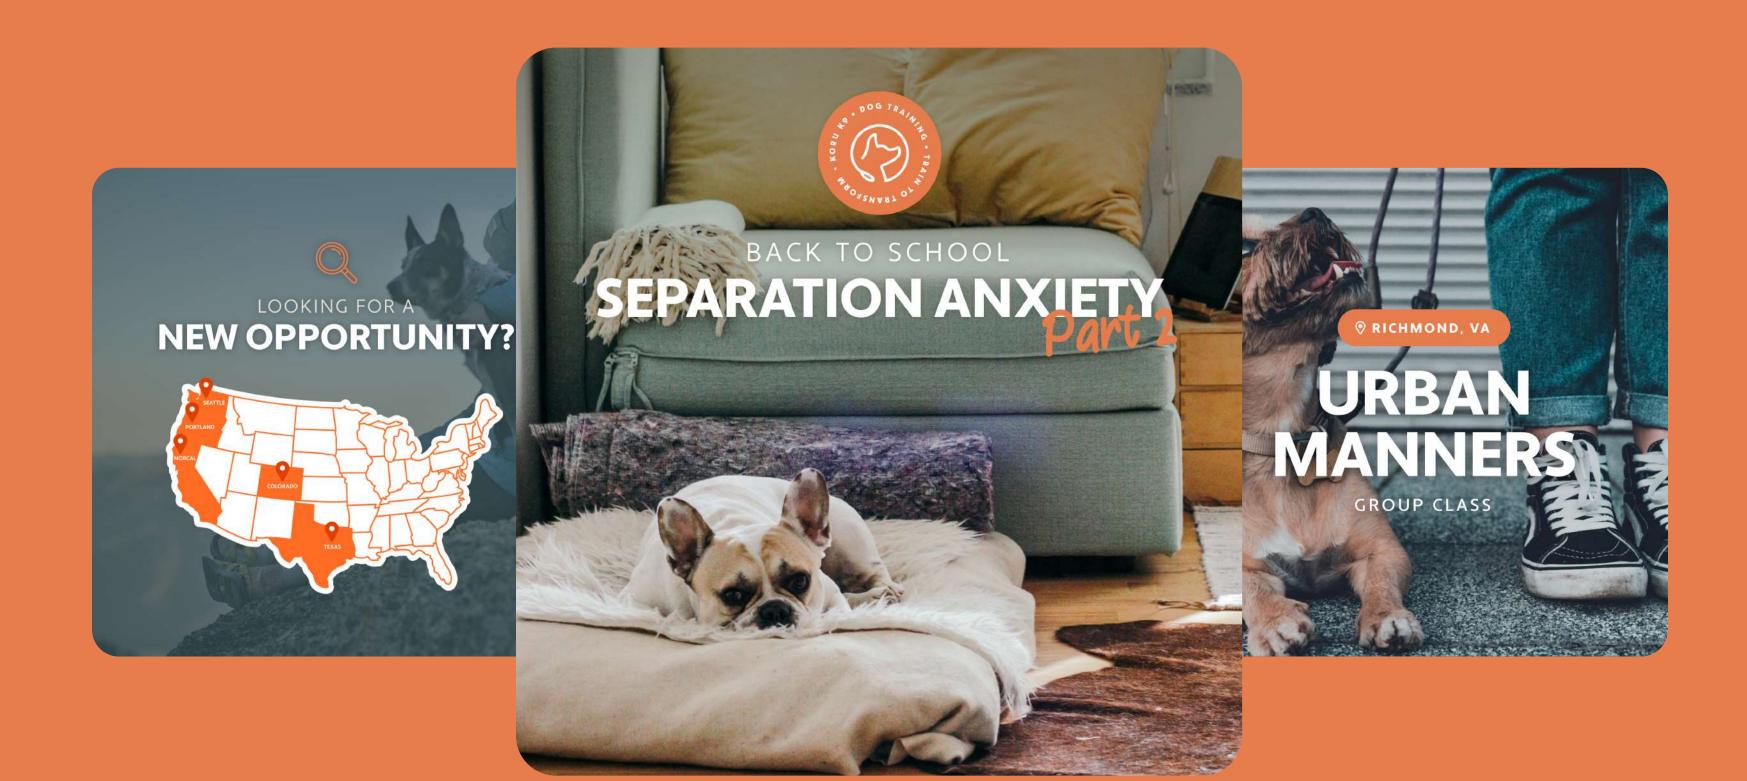

I've been in the industry for six years, working as a veterinary technician, dog nutritionist and dog trainer. My goal as your trainer is to form a line of communication between you and your dog that will better your relationship."
