Three rewarding resolutions for you and your dog (And how to keep them)

New Year's resolutions are easy to make but (as some of us already know all too well) they're much harder to keep.

Add your dog into that equation, and the promises you made yourself as the ball dropped at midnight on New Year's Eve seem a lot more daunting just a few short weeks later.

But making real changes in your relationship with your pet doesn't have to be intimidating. With the right guidance, any dog owner can accomplish their New Year's resolutions.

That's where we come in. We've picked three attainable resolutions for you and your dog and laid out how you can check them off your list.

Get training for your dog.

Call us biased, but we love this resolution for you.

The first step in building the relationship you want with your dog is the decision to start training. The next step—finding the right trainer—can make or break your resolution.

Story of the month Johnny

If your dog barks at people walking by your house or making a delivery, you're not alone. Johnny's owners brought him to us to help address his reactivity to delivery people.

After four weeks of training? "No more scared mailmen!"
