

Train to Transform Your pack is our passion

What you should know about positive reinforcement & balanced training Positive reinforcement and proper balanced dog training go hand-in-hand. You can't have one without the other.

Nevertheless, the two are sometimes misrepresented as mutually exclusive. We want to help clear that up.

We've answered the most common questions dog owners ask about positive reinforcement to help you understand its role in balanced dog training. What is positive reinforcement dog training?

Positive reinforcement is one of the four quadrants of operant conditioning. In dog training, positive reinforcement is a technique used to encourage a desired behavior. It involves adding a favorable stimulus to a training session to increase the likelihood of the desired behavior being repeated in the future. Simply put, positive reinforcement is giving your dog incentive to continue with good behavior. Does positive reinforcement work in dog training?

Learn more about positive reinforcement

Story of the month

Biggie

was a better listener, much calmer and able to go on walks without stress!

reactive pup back from a six-week board and train. He

See Biggie's training in action

Trainer highlight

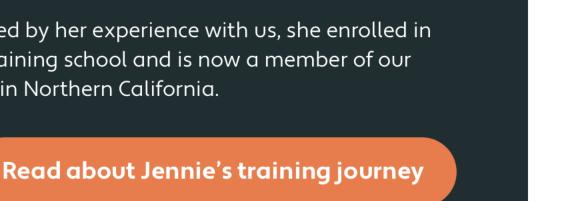

Jennie brings a unique point of view to being a Koru

K9 trainer: she started out as a client!

Inspired by her experience with us, she enrolled in our training school and is now a member of our team in Northern California.

Jennie Pardi

on Instagram! Stay up-to-date on the latest Koru K9 news and stick around for stories, advice and the sweet dog content we know you love!

Join our pack

Upcoming events

Check out our upcoming events and join in on the fun!

View all upcoming events